Parental rights at issue in custody

Sheryl Hardy's fight with state could go all the way to high court

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROODHOUSE — Sheryl Hardy is a mother who wants to raise her own child. She also has been convicted of murdering another of her children.

That combination adds up to a fight between Hardy and the state of Illinois that is being watched closely by child welfare advocates around the nation. It also raises constitutional questions about parental rights that could take the case all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court.

"It has the potential to be a very important case," said Jennifer Cooper, staff attorney for Justice for Children, a Houston-based advocacy group that has filed legal briefs against Hardy.

Bruce Boyer, director of Loyola University's ChildLaw Clinic, agreed.

"Parental rights get terminated all the time," he said. "What's uncommon is to find a situation where someone is convicted of murder and a child is taken away as a consequence. The case could lead to important interpretations of state statutes."

The case stems from the 1989 death of Hardy's 2-year-old son, Bradley McGee. During the trial in Florida, Hardy testified that she smoked a cigarette while her ex-husband, Thomas Coe, punished the boy for soiling his pants by lifting him by his ankles and repeatedly dunking him in the toilet. The boy died the next day of head injuries, and a medical examiner counted more than 90 cuts and bruises across the boy's body and head.

Coe was convicted of first-degree murder and sentenced to life in prison. Hardy was convicted of second-degree murder. She was sentenced to 30 years in prison and was released after serving nine years.

Hardy returned to Illinois, settling in her hometown of Jerseyville, about 60 miles southwest of Springfield. She married Randy Hardy in July 2001 and gave birth to their son the following February.

A provision of the state's Adoption Act says parents can be deemed unfit if a child in their care previously died from neglect, and shortly after Hardy's son was born, the state's Department of Family Services took him and placed him in a foster home.

The state and Hardy have been in a tug-of-war over the boy ever since. In late 2001 Hardy won a hearing and regained custody. But the DCFS won an appeal of that decision and placed the boy with foster parents.

Last month, an Illinois Appellate Court ruled that cutting Hardy's parental rights would not be in the best interests of the child, finding that prosecutors had not offered enough evidence that Hardy is now negligent or abusive.

"Parental rights and responsibilities are of deep human importance and will not be lightly or easily terminated," the court said.

Two weeks later, after Randy Hardy took custody of his son, Attorney General Lisa Madigan's office filed notice that it plans to appeal the decision to the Illinois Supreme Court.

In the meantime, Sheryl Hardy has unlimited supervised time with her son, who lives in the couple's new home in Roodhouse, about 25 miles from Jerseyville.

The appellate decision has triggered a furious debate about what is best for the boy.

"They tortured this child," said Kip Liles, an emergency shelter parent who temporarily cared for Hardy's son Bradley before he was killed. "Any mother who sits back and lets her child get abused and does nothing about is just as guilty. People like that should never get a second chance."

But Sheryl Hardy's stepmother, Lela

Doris her wife, in this
